GW PROFESSOR TO EXAMINE ROLE OF WOMEN IN POST-COMMUNIST EASTERN EUROPE

The John D. and Catherine T. MacArthur Foundation has awarded a $60,000 grant to a George Washington University professor to research the role of women in both the "new political and economic order," and policy-making, in Central and Eastern Europe. Sharon Wolchik, director of the Russian and East European Studies program at The George Washington University, will conduct the research.

According to Wolchik, the project will "focus on women's roles in bringing about the collapse of communist rule in Central and Eastern Europe and in the transition to post-Communist rule."

In addition, she will conduct an overall analysis of these and other issues in the region and develop a detailed case study of Czechoslovakia. Information will be gathered from printed materials as well as through personal interviews with scholars, political leaders and feminist activists in Central and Eastern Europe.

KRUPSAW NAMED TO D.C. EDUCATION COMMITTEE

Marilyn Krupsaw, director of The George Washington
University's Science and Engineering Apprentice Program, has been appointed to a District of Columbia committee charged with exploring reforms in mathematics, engineering and science education.

The 15-member task force, established at the request of D.C. Mayor Sharon Pratt Dixon, is composed of civic, business and education leaders. It will devise a program to improve science education in grade levels K-12 and post-secondary levels. The committee hopes to secure a National Science Foundation (NSF) grant to improve district education in these areas.

The committee will analyze various approaches and develop an outline containing goals, methods, a timetable and assessment techniques consistent with the NSF guidelines. It will then submit a final proposal to the NSF. If the proposal is accepted, the District would receive a portion of a five-year, $10 billion grant.

"Krupsaw's college school collaboration and articulation made her a natural for the committee," said an official with the Mayor's Educational Affairs Department. Krupsaw was tapped by Educational Affairs Director Jeanette Harris.

NSF has asked state governments to respond to the program initiation, and a final proposal will be submitted by October 15, 1991. A preliminary proposal was sent to the NSF on June 16.

Dear ^F2^,

President Bush wants the U.S. to help train Soviet people to move towards a more free-market economy.

The George Washington University's Soviet Executive Program has done just that. For 24 Soviets who participated in the program, their academic training is completed. Now a majority of them apply their academic training in a business development internship at more than ten corporations throughout the United States.

The group, which arrived last September, represents a diversity of industries and ethnic backgrounds. Since that time, they have studied business English, economics, finance, strategic management, personnel management and technological advancements, among other subjects, designed to prepare them for their upcoming internship.

Among the companies that are sponsoring Soviet executives during the coming year in business development internships are United Airlines, Dresser Industries, United Parcel Service, Twentieth Century Fox, CSX Bardge Company, Norwest Bank and Mayflower International.

While several participants are still negotiating contracts, attached is a partial list of internship placements.

On Wednesday, July 31, the University will host a graduation banquet to honor the Soviet participants. If you would like more information about the program or the banquet, please contact me in the Office of University Relations, at (202) 994-6460.

Sincerely,

Heather Ittel Public Information Specialist

OFFICE OF PROFESSIONAL DEVELOPMENT

July 18, 1991

Dear Heather:

I am sorry I did not fax this material to you yesterday afternoon, as promised. When I prepared to do so I found out that the fax machine had been down all day, and is still not operating. Therefore, Roblyn Anderson offered to hand deliver.

I have enclosed a listing of the Soviets with the company placements that seem firm. I have indicated with a check those that are, in my mind, completely final (although all of them may be). I just thought for sake of an on-air interview, the ones with the check marks would be best.

As far as remaining activities:

On Friday, July 26, classes will officially end. The Soviets are being honored at a final luncheon in the University Club at 12:00 noon. Dr. Peter Lauter is hosting this event, and has invited speakers from the Chrysler Corporation as well as others who I don't know. He can be reached at 4-7374 for further details.

Two of the men will be leaving on July 29: Alex Medvedev and Andrew Raschuk. One has already begun his internship: Oleg Nikitin.

The graduation ceremony on July 31 will be held in the main dining room of the Marvin Center's University Club, from 5-7 p.m.

President Trachtenberg, Dean Ben Burdetsky, Ms. Kim McManus, and Dr. Lev Zak, will be featured speakers. If the Soviet Ambassador accepts our invitation he will also be asked to speak. I should know this in a few more days.

Please call me if you have further questions. We do hope to have some media coverage of the event. I have left a request for Linda Christensen (on vacation) to take photos; other photographers would be welcome.

I forgot to mention that T. D. White or Gray Mounger from the Alumni Office will also be on the program, and will present the Soviets with alumni pins and certificates or cards. Wives of all Soviets present will be gifted with corsages. Music accompaniment will be by a professional group called "Lox and Vodka" who perform Klezmer, Jewish, and Russian music, and have performed locally at the Soviet Embassy, Israeli Embassy, The Corcoran Gallery, and the Kennedy Center.

Best regards,

Barbara Maddox

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

LOUIS SOHN NAMED CONGRESSIONAL PROFESSOR AT GEORGE WASHINGTON

WASHINGTON, DC -- Louis B. Sohn, a renowned international law scholar who helped shape the United Nations, joins The George Washington University as its second Congressional Professor.

The one-year appointment, to commence next month, is awarded to an individual who has led a distinguished career in public service. The first Congressional Professorship was awarded to former Senator Lowell Weicker who currently serves as governor of Connecticut.

"Professor Sohn's wealth of experience in the field of international law cannot be matched," says Jack Friedenthal, dean of the National Law Center (NLC). "It will be a great honor and a pleasure for GW students and faculty to work with him during the coming year."

At GW, Sohn will teach a course on the law of the sea at the Law Center in the fall and will lead a special seminar on "The United Nations and the Maintenance of International Peace and Security" for the Elliott School of International Affairs in the spring.

Since 1981, Sohn has been the Emily and Ernest Woodruff
Professor of International Law at the University of Georgia.

Prior to joining the faculty at Georgia, he was the Bemis
Professor of International Law Emeritus at Harvard University, where he taught aspiring international lawyers for 35 years and held one of the law school's most prestigious academic appointments.

"Sohn pioneered the teaching of the law of international organizations and international human rights law in the U.S," says Thomas Buergenthal, the Lobingier Professor of Comparative Law and Jurisprudence at the NLC. "He is beloved by many generations of international lawyers and his former students occupy leading positions in the diplomatic service of many countries, in international organizations and on international tribunals."

A native of Poland, Sohn has been a prominent figure in the development of international law, teaching the first course ever offered in the United States on United Nations law. As an assistant to Judge Manley O. Hudson, a member of the Permanent Court of International Justice at The Hague, Sohn played an integral role in the preparation of the Charter of the United Nations.

Sohn's work on behalf of the United Nations continued when he went on to prepare an annotated collection of treaties on the peaceful settlement of disputes, two volumes of the United Nations legislative series dealing with the high seas, and several volumes on the Repertory of Practice of United Nations Organs.

Over the years, Sohn has taken time away from academe to work closely with the State Department on disarmament and law of the sea issues. In 1961, he helped prepare the U.S. draft of the treaty on general and complete disarmament. Sohn returned to the State Department in 1970 as the agency's first counsellor of international law. As the State's counsellor, he negotiated law of the seas disputes and established provisions to settle such concerns in the future.

Fourteen years later, in 1984, Sohn was appointed by George Shultz, then secretary of state, as chairman of the U.S. delegation to the international Committee of Experts charged with devising ways to settle disputes between the 35 state parties to the Helsinki Final Act on Security and Cooperation in Europe. In addition, Sohn has been involved in U.S. cases before the International Court of Justice.

Since 1969, Sohn has been chairman of the Commission to Study the Organization of Peace, editing several of its reports on the United Nations, human rights and disarmament. He also is the author of more than seven leading textbooks on international law.

WASHINGTON, DC -- Louis B. Sohn, a renowned international law scholar who helped shape the United Nations, joins The George Washington University as its second Congressional Professor.

The one-year appointment, to commence next month, is awarded to an individual who has led a distinguished career in public service. The first Congressional Professorship was awarded to former Senator Lowell Weicker who currently serves as governor of Connecticut.

"Professor Sohn's wealth of experience in the field of international law cannot be matched," says Jack Friedenthal, dean of the National Law Center (NLC). "It will be a great honor and a pleasure for GW students and faculty to work with him during the coming year."

At GW, Sohn will teach a course on the law of the sea at the Law Center in the fall and will lead a special seminar on "The United Nations and the Maintenance of International Peace and Security" for the Elliott School of International Affairs in the spring.

Since 1981, Sohn has been the Emily and Ernest Woodruff
Professor of International Law at the University of Georgia.

Prior to joining the faculty at Georgia, he was the Bemis
Professor of International Law Emeritus at Harvard University, where he taught aspiring international lawyers for 35 years and
held one of the law school's most prestigious academic appointments.

"Sohn pioneered the teaching of the law of international organizations and international human rights law in the U.S," says Thomas Buergenthal, the Lobingier Professor of Comparative Law and Jurisprudence at the NLC. "He is beloved by many generations of international lawyers and his former students occupy leading positions in the diplomatic service of many countries, in international organizations and on international tribunals."

A native of Poland, Sohn has been a prominent figure in the development of international law, teaching the first course ever offered in the United States on United Nations law. As an assistant to Judge Manley O. Hudson, a member of the Permanent Court of International Justice at The Hague, Sohn played an integral role in the preparation of the Charter of the United Nations.

Sohn's work on behalf of the United Nations continued when he went on to prepare an annotated collection of treaties on the peaceful settlement of disputes, two volumes of the United Nations legislative series dealing with the high seas, and several volumes on the Repertory of Practice of United Nations Organs.

Over the years, Sohn has taken time away from academe to work closely with the State Department on disarmament and law of the sea issues. In 1961, he helped prepare the U.S. draft of the treaty on general and complete disarmament. Sohn returned to the State Department in 1970 as the agency's first counsellor of international law. As the State's counsellor, he negotiated law of the seas disputes and established provisions to settle such concerns in the future.

Fourteen years later, in 1984, Sohn was appointed by George Shultz, then secretary of state, as chairman of the U.S. delegation to the international Committee of Experts charged with devising ways to settle disputes between the 35 state parties to the Helsinki Final Act on Security and Cooperation in Europe. In addition, Sohn has been involved in U.S. cases before the International Court of Justice.

Since 1969, Sohn has been chairman of the Commission to Study the Organization of Peace, editing several of its reports on the United Nations, human rights and disarmament. He also is the author of more than seven leading textbooks on international law.

PURSUING CULTURAL DIVERSITY IN HIGHER EDUCATION

"Improving higher educational opportunities for ethnic and racial minorities must become more than an objective of the admissions office," say researchers Barbara Astone and Elsa Nuñez-Wormack. "It must become an institutional policy."

Authors of the new report, "Pursuing Diversity: Recruiting College Minority Students," Astone and Nuñez-Wormack provide strategies for colleges and universities to help recruit and retain minority students. Their report examines all areas that can assist in the increase of minority presence on campus, including curriculum, financial aid and the need for minority role models.

The report was recently published by The George Washington
University's Educational Resources Information Center (ERIC) Clearinghouse on Higher Education, in cooperation with the Association for the Study of Higher Education (ASHE).

According to Astone and Nuñez-Wormack, the percentage of minorities graduating from college and universities, relative to their representation in society, has actually decreased in the last 20 years. This in spite of the increasing attention higher education has given to minority recruitment.

Reasons for the decrease include the higher-than-average dropout rate of minorities in high school. Furthermore, those who do graduate from high school do not attend college in the same percentage as non-minority students. Most minority students in two-year colleges, say the authors, do not complete their degrees. And, among those students who do graduate from community colleges or enter a four-year institution directly out of high school, fewer still last to graduate with a baccalaureate degree.

In order to turn the tide of minority decline in higher education, Astone and Nuñez-Wormack recommend that colleges and universities begin by asking what is it about the institution itself that has contributed to the present low enrollment of minorities.

Secondly, they advocate a review of each institution's dedication to seeing these students through to graduation.

"If minority students are being enrolled in significant numbers only to drop out after the first or second term, then all the recruitment programs in the world will not serve to achieve the real goals--academic success and graduation," they write.

The first step to a truly culturally diverse college campus, say Astone and Nuñez-Wormack, is to develop an awareness of differing cultural values and needs. Colleges and universities should collect information on their minority populations, especially the differences between the various ethnic and racial groups; evaluate model programs on other college campuses; determine the effect that financial aid has on the success or failure of students in various minority groups; and develop "culturally specific" recruitment strategies, among others.

Both Astone and Nuñez-Wormack hold positions at The College of Staten Island, City University of New York. Astone is director of retention programs and teaches developmental reading and writing and English language. Nuñez-Wormack is the associate dean of faculty and an associate professor of English.

"Pursuing Diversity: Recruiting College Minority Students" is No.7 of the 1990 Higher Education Reports Series from ASHE and the ERIC Clearinghouse on Higher Education, and was published in July 1991. ERIC is a sponsored project of The George Washington University School of Education and Human Development.

The monograph is available for $17.00 from ASHE-ERIC Higher Education Reports, The George Washington University, One Dupont Circle, Suite 630, Washington, D.C. 20036; (202) 296-2597.

Review copies for publications are available on request.

GW PROGRAM IN INTERNATIONAL NEGOTIATIONS
GIVES HISTORY TEACHERS A TASTE OF DIPLOMACY

A group of high school history teachers will study international peace and conflict resolution this fall thanks to a $60,000 grant the U.S. Peace Institute has awarded for a joint project between The George Washington University, The Council of Chief State School Officers and the Continuing Education Division of the University of Virginia at Charlottesville.

The project -- "The U.S. and the World Since 1945: A Proposed Model for Training High School Teachers of American Studies" -- will be run by Project LINKS (Linking International Knowledge with Schools), an in-service training program for public school teachers created by GW's Elliott School of International Affairs.

The teachers will participate in two-day workshops offered by eminent scholars in international affairs. Next Spring, teams comprised of two teachers and two scholars will hold "satellite workshops" for teachers in a geographic area covering Baltimore, Greater Washington, DC and western Maryland, said LINKS codirector Tom Collins.

"We know that the best trainers of teachers are practicing teachers," Collins said, explaining the goal of the program. He said the scholars will provide the content for the curriculum and the teachers will introduce the methodology.

POET JOHN HAINES TEACHES FREE COMMUNITY WORKSHOP AS PART OF GW'S JENNY MCKEAN MOORE WRITER-IN-WASHINGTON PROGRAM

Poet and essayist John Haines has been named the Jenny
McKean Moore Writer-in-Washington at The George Washington University for the 1991-92 academic year. During his tenure, Haines will teach a free community workshop titled "The Art of the Essay." The workshop is slated to begin September 11, 1991.

Haines was nominated for a 1991 National Book Critics Circle Award for his work "Poems, 1980-88." A prolific writer, Haines has assembled two other poetry collections including "News From the Glacier" (Wesleyan U. Press: 1982) and "Winter News" (Wesleyan U. Press: 1966), as well as two essay collections "The Stars, The Snow, The Fire" (Graywolf Press: 1989) and "Living Off the Country: Essays on Poetry and Place" (U. of Michigan Press: 1981).

Among Haines's honors are a Western Arts Federation Award and two Guggenheim Fellowships in poetry. He has studied at St.

John's College, the National Art School and American Universityin Washington, DC, and the Hans Hofmann School of Fine Art in New York, NY.

The Jenny McKean Moore Writer-in-Washington program is sponsored by a fund established in the name of the late Jenny McKean Moore, wife of the former Episcopal Bishop of Washington and New York. It is designed to bring promising authors to GW's campus for one academic year. Each semester, the writer teaches two creative writing courses -- one for University students and one for the Washington community.

For more information about the free writing workshop or to apply, call GW's department of English at (202) 994-6180.

Applicants for the workshop need not have academic qualifications.

LAW STUDENTS WORK FOR ELDERLY INMATES IN PROJECT FOR OLDER PRISONERS

WASHINGTON, DC -- Andrew Bowman, 55, is a first offender serving time for using bad checks. He has one partial kidney, gout and diabetes. Billy Barlow, a 71-years-old sex offender confined to a wheelchair, is suffering from liver and brain damage. And Lonnie Simmons, 80, is serving his 30th year for a murder conviction.

What these prison inmates have in common is their participation in the Project for Older Prisoners (POPS) at The George Washington University National Law Center. Established by GW associate law professor Jonathan Turley, POPS is a one-of-akind national project assisting the nation's population of older prisoners to gain early release. This fall, more than 150 GW law students will participate in POPS.

Turley is working with numerous state legislatures to develop new policies and laws for the fast-growing population of geriatric prisoners. According to Turley, these inmates will number more than 125,000 by the next century.

Entering its first full year of operation at George Washington, POPS began in 1989 when Turley represented Quenton
Brown, a Louisiana man convicted of stealing a handful of cash and a 15-cent piece of pie. He was sentenced to 30 years without parole. Turley argued that the continued incarceration of high-cost, low-risk inmates like Brown was inefficient when more dangerous prisoners were being released under court orders to ease the intense overcrowding in Louisiana prisons. Brown was later released and relocated by POPS to Florida where he still resides.

As word about Turley's work on behalf of Brown spread throughout the prison community, more cases of elderly and infirm prisoners came his way. With the help from eager law students in Turley's classes at Tulane University Law School, POPS was born. Turley, who joined the GW faculty last year, is continuing his work in Washington. Since 1989, more than 500 prisoners have been assisted by approximately 300 POPS students working in five states.

POPS prisoners are selected because of either their advanced years or infirm medical conditions. Turley then assigns a law student to the inmate's case. Under Turley's supervision, the student conducts an exhaustive background analysis to determine the inmate's likely recidivism (the statistical likelihood of committing a new offense). If the prisoner is a low risk, the student then determines where the prisoner would live and how the prisoner would support himself. Ultimately, the student presents the case to the parole or pardon board.

"POPS addresses a real need in the prison system to reach prisoners who have been essentially forgotten," says Turley.

"At three times the average cost of a younger prisoner, this silent population must be considered if we are going to get through the worsening prison crisis."

Turley also sees POPS as a way of bringing public interest law into the forefront of legal education.

"POPS brings home the point that what defines a lawyer is not how many billable hours you acquire, but your pro bono work on behalf of the less fortunate," he says. "As a practicing attorney and law professor, one of the truly disappointing things for me is how little pro bono work is performed by the average lawyer in this country."

As an advocate of mandatory community service in law school, Turley believes law schools share the blame for the low priority given to public service by practicing lawyers. "It is important to instill a sense of commitment to public interest work at the embryonic stage of training new lawyers," Turley says.

In addition to individual cases, POPS also works on drafting prison reform legislation. POPS assisted in passing model prison legislation in Louisiana in 1989. The new POPS office at GW will help Congress, the District of Columbia, Maryland and Virginia with new laws governing incarceration.

Alternatives to incarceration proposed by POPS include homerelease programs that would track elderly or infirm prisoners by means of special electronic bracelets they would be required to wear.
